Setting forth anew in question of adventure, we alight upon the dreamy isle, Hawaii, in the center of the Pacific, where dull care vanishes like the foam of the sparkling waves.

Lured by the siren songs of a thousand Hawaiian quartets, orchestras and lyric writers, we approach the "Beach at Waikiki".

We find the beach crowded with the aforesaid song writers, thinking of words to rhyme with "moon" and "Love".

One of the many reasons why the eager traveler who is lured to Uncle Sam's playground in the Pacific doesn't wish to hurry back to office hours.

When the tired business men finally go on a strike, here's where they'll undoubtedly go.

While we're still on the beach, let's see all that's to be seen.

"Underneath the Sheltering Palm"

Without stealing Luther Burbank's thunder, we beg to assert that it's possible to make a date with two peaches.

A favorite diversion of the Hawaiians and their visiting friends is surf riding.

A touch of jazz in the zephyrs as we leave the beach adds interest to the scenery.

Coffee berries are refreshing on a hot day and the bushes grow in wildest profusion as does all vegetation on this island of perpetual sunshine.

Hawaii abounds in cool and sparkling springs of crystalline purity.

If you want to quench "that thirst" come with us into the pineapple forest.

It's our private belief that the first eviction in history was caused by the pineapple. If you don't know how to manage one you are certain to be "stuck", as the man said who owned a "jitney".

LUSCIOUS.

Oriental types at work in the field.

NOTE: Sometimes they have the toothache in Hawaii, but the song writers never mention it.

Loveliest of all flowers in Hawaii are the NIGHT BLOOMING CEREUS which blossom only twice during the year and vanish at sunrise like Deacons on Broadway.

Hawaiian "music" is sometimes heard in Hawaii. We must confess that we ventured this far from home in order to see the real hula dance on its native heath.

The old gentleman with the drum isn't paying much attention to what's going on around him. Funny we never met a "drummer" like that before.

This lady was once engaged to a cruel native chieftain but she managed to wriggle out of it.

As it's getting dark, we better be going and save our eyesight. Sorry to break up the party but we have a sort of an engagement down on the beach.

Not going our way? Well, good night, sweet Hawaiian dreams!

And now we come to one of the marvelous scenic wonders of Hawaii-no, wait a minute. Let's demand an encore.
